While the official figures for women's work participation are low, much of the work that women do is not captured in official data accounts. It is argued<sup>1</sup> that where this is to be captured, women's overall work participation would be 86.2 per cent. While the official data<sup>2</sup> shows that women's work participation rate is around 25.3 per cent in rural areas and 14.7 per cent in the urban areas, estimates indicate that there is a huge workforce of women, therefore there is a need to secure ...

work. This is widely seen as a woman's role, and is economically not recognized. The recognition of this has led to the inclusion of gender in the development process as a key indicator, and the emergence of a series of terms as "women in development," "gender and development," and "women's development." 2. Critique of the Discourse of Development The discussion of women in development requires a review of the discourse on development. A variety of approaches to development ...

It will be 118 years before women have the same career prospects as men. No country in the world has closed its gender gap. Even as female leaders steer multinationals and major economies, the reality in 2016 is a working world which still excludes, underpays, overlooks and exploits half of its available talent.
